MANAGEMENT IDEAS WORTH A FORTUNE

achieve the level of success that their image of themselves can absorb," says Brian Schwartz, the Greenwich psychologist. If, long ago, somebody important to you—a parent, a teacher, a sibling—told you that you aren't very smart, or very competent, or very likable, or that nothing you do is ever quite good enough, you will have the devil's own time believing that you're capable of doing well in life or that you deserve to. This conviction of unbusiness is rarely something people take out and examine in therapy. It's just there, lurking around the edges of life, a creature out of a Stephen King novel, spoiling everything. In rotten childhoods do become successful, of course. They can't enjoy what they've achieved. The popular culture (Marilyn Monroe) sports (Dennis Rodman)
